Biography

Jay Elmore has successfully represented Fortune 500 corporations, as well as individuals and smaller businesses, in jury trials, administrative proceedings, arbitrations, mediations, and appeals.

His practice encompasses a wide array of litigation matters, including class actions, partnership and contract disputes, product liability, hospital law, personal injury, real estate, business torts, construction, environmental issues, and franchise disputes. Additionally, he has experience serving as a neutral mediator and arbitrator.

Jay focuses on preparing for a successful outcome at trial while taking advantage of opportunities that may arise for negotiation and settlement. He has been called on by clients from around the country to defend class action matters in Georgia, Florida, Alabama, California, Ohio, Nevada, Texas, and Connecticut, and has been successful in defeating class certification in cases seeking hundreds of millions of dollars from his clients.

He has lectured and published numerous articles on trial practice and business litigation issues, such as class actions and arbitrations. Jay has also served as chair of Georgia's ICLE Class Action Seminar and as an adjunct professor of law at Emory University Law School, teaching class action law.

Jay has been recognized by Benchmark Plaintiff, Chambers USA, and as a Georgia Super Lawyer.

He is active in a variety of community service organizations and was awarded the League of Women Voters Good Government Award for his pro bono legal work.

Jay served on active duty as an officer in the United States Navy from 1970 to 1973.
